The child is the hero

Every child carries an inner light, their Scintilla. The Garden characters are companions, mirrors and creative tools, not roles that children must imitate. A child may recognise a value they already carry, notice a weakness they wish to transform, and discover that the power to choose and grow belongs to them.

Flame the Firefly illuminates the light within; Drake the Dragon invites the Click of Wisdom before a choice. They guide the journey without taking the place of the child, who remains the hero of their own story.

An invitation to make the character your own

Choose a character, a topic or a quality that speaks to you. You may explore more than one.

Give the character your own first name, a chosen name, or a name of light. You may also imagine yourself beside the original Garden character.

Keep, reinterpret or invent the character's special power. Notice how this gift, or the possibility of growing it, lives within you.

Create freely through a story, drawing, painting, sculpture, comic, theatre scene, puppetry, animation or game. There is no prescribed plot or correct ending.

If a character represents a Weakness, explore it without judgement. A weakness is a behaviour to recognise and transform, never a label for the child.

Choose whether to share your creation. Your personal reflection and the meaning you give it remain your own.

A flexible creative ecosystem

Storytelling Original stories, illustrated books, character diaries and child-led narratives.

Art Portraits, masks, murals, costumes, comics, character cards and exhibitions.

Theatre Role-play, dialogue, puppetry, ensemble performances and original scripts.

Animation Short character adventures, expressive movements, visual metaphors and episodic stories.

Games Character exploration, cooperative challenges, choice-based adventures and creative world-building. Games can invite reflection without ranking children's goodness.

The original character names, powers and values below come from the supplied manuscript. The thematic categories and creative possibilities are a proposed editorial organisation for future classroom and ecosystem use; they do not replace the original stories.

From book to animation and games

Each character can become a reusable creative building block: a recognisable appearance, a Special Name Power, a value or weakness, and a world of possible choices. Artists and developers can use this catalogue to design character profiles, animation episodes, playable journeys and collaborative experiences. The child's agency and the original meaning of the Scintilla remain central.

For production, the next layer would be an illustrated character bible, with visual references, personality notes, settings, voice, motion, possible story worlds and game mechanics. The present catalogue is a thematic and educational foundation, not a finished animation or game specification.
